

HOUSE OF TOO MUCH TROUBLE.

In the House of Too Much Trouble Lived a lonely little boy; He was eager for a playmate, He was hungry for a toy.

But was always too much bother, Too much dirt and too much noise, For the House of Too Much Trouble Wasn't meant for little boys.

And sometimes the little fellow Left a book upon the floor, Or forgot and laughed too loudly, Or he failed to close the door.

In a House of Too Much Trouble Things must be precise and trim— In a House of Too Much Trouble There was little room for him.

He must never scatter playthings, He must never romp and play; Every room must be in order And kept quiet all the day.

He had never owned a pet— In the House of Too Much Trouble He is trim and quiet yet.

Every room is set in order— Every book is in its place And the lonely little fellow Wears a smile upon his face.

In the House of Too Much Trouble He is silent and at rest— In the House of Too Much Trouble, With a My on his breast.

—Alfred Bigelow Kane in Munsey's.

and thoroughly stocked stores in town. Their prices are the lowest. Mrs. Zula Robson and Mrs. T. M. Gilbert spent Sunday in Phoenix visiting friends.

The engine house that the city is building for their new electrical engine is nearing completion. The engine has been ordered and will arrive from Chicago in a short time.

The town presents a very much improved appearance now that the streets have been cleaned and put in first-class condition by Street Commissioner Davies. If the yards and orchards of all the city property were also thoroughly cleaned, it would seem that a revolution had indeed taken place in the city.

AMELIA BLOOMER'S SUIT
Celebrated Costume Worn for the First Time 43 Years Ago.

Just forty-eight years ago today, on July 23, 1851, Mrs. Amelia Bloomer first wore her now celebrated costume at a ball at Lowell, Mass. The storm of wit and ridicule that followed drove the Bloomers out of existence within a few months after its invention, only to be revived again forty years later in modified form by the advent of the bicycle and athletics among women, and to be hailed as one of the most suitable and useful of female dresses.

This fashionable young woman who astonished the guests at the Lowell ball with her bold innovation was the editor of a journal called the Lily, published at Seneca Falls, New York. She was a woman of ideas, evidently much in advance of her time. Her magazine was devoted to temperance and the enfranchisement of women, and had attained in two years the circulation of 1,000—a very handsome business for that day.

Mrs. Bloomer for months before Lowell ball had advocated a change in woman's dress for outdoor wear. She took the picturesque dress of the Polish women as a model, and wrote:

"We would have a skirt reach down to nearly half-way between the ankle and the knee, and not made quite so full as is the present fashion. Underneath this skirt, trousers, moderately full, coming down to the ankle and in step, and these gathered with an elastic band. The shoes or slippers should suit the season. For winter or cool weather the trousers should also be full, but come down into a boot which should raise three or four inches at least above the ankle. This boot should be gracefully sloped at the upper edge and trimmed with fur or fannel."

Although Mrs. Bloomer had advocated the dress for trousers, neither she nor any other woman ventured to wear it until finally the inventor herself appeared at the ball in cotton-planning town. The fragmentary accounts that have come down of the event indicate that the sensation created shook all New England. But the Bloomer costume as it was immediately called, spread, and passed in dozens of places, and it was not until the late 1890s that the costume Mrs. Bloomer wore in her magazine, "If delicacy requires that the skirt should be long, why do our ladies a dozen times a day condemn the indecency of raising their dresses to prevent their dangling in the mud of the streets?"

DEALERS SHOULD BE HELD
A woman's idea of ideal love is the way she would love the man she loves if she did not love him in the way she loves him.
People who are in love can make themselves miserable when they are together by making a time when they were miserable because they were not together.
People who pick roadstools thinking them mushrooms and eat them themselves bear the penalty of their own folly, but certainly the consumer who buys fungi in the open market has a right to trust to the knowledge of the dealer, and the city should enforce that right for him.—New York Tribune.
